The house isn't dark when he comes home. It should be, it's late, everyone should be asleep, but there's a light on.

It messes with the routine. Dark bar dark cab dark driveway dark house. He's in no state to handle a change.

She's sitting in the living room, hair mussed, eyes red. Not quite so pretty like this, not quite as captivating as she used to be. She looks old.

Of course, he probably looks old, too, but he avoids mirrors.

She looks at him. "I can't do this anymore."

Richie just nods and heads for the dark bedroom.
